

Fuel for Thought

Something to Showcase

Pride might be one of the seven deadly sins, but I'm happy to confess to feeling plenty of it during a recent visit to our site by our company's Board members.

Chris Anderson
Site Operations
Manager, QER

The Board members came to the New Fuels Development Centre to get a first-hand look at our technology demonstration plant project, and to say they were impressed is an understatement.

While all of us on site have been very happy with the commissioning of the demonstration plant and its operations, it is still important to get that nod of approval from the very people who made the original decision to invest in the project.

Just as pleasing has been the response from locals who come out to have a look at our facility, and from the majority of comments in our visitor book they are finding the experience both interesting and informative.

Recently a group of visitors asked me when we were starting up, and I was happy to inform them that it was in fact running at the time, highlighting the minimum of noise associated with the plant's operations.

Of course, this is only the first step in our longer-term plans to develop an oil shale industry, but so far the responses from visitors indicate we are on the right track.

For anyone interested in learning more about what we are doing, our visitor centre is open 7 days a week.

Creating new fuels for Australia

www.qer.com.au